THE NAME UNSUNG.

"Sing ye," she said—the lyric muse—
"Of human hopes and fears,
Of human smiles and tears."
In all the tones that singers use
They sang through all the years.

"You sing brave songs of war," she said;
"You sing the hopes of youth;
You sing the might of truth;
You sing of stars, of roses red,
And maids that love, in sooth.

"You sing me well of joy," she said,
"And better yet of pain—
Of hearts that loved in vain,
Of lovers lost or cold or dead,
Of hopes like blasted grain."

She said, "Yea, even of things divine
Full loftily you sing;
And but one gracious thing
Have you forgot, Oh! singers mine,
To tune on pipe or string."

"Of love that taught to woo or wed,
Of love that died for others,
Or knitted friends like brothers,
You sing full well; and yet," she said,
"Who names the love of mothers?"

They bent the knee and bared the head—
Young poets of to-day,
Old bards of ages gray!
"We cannot sing of her," they said;
"Spare that one name, we pray.

"Let art claim all the rest," they cried;
"That name is nature's own."
They spoke with graver tone:
"Queen, thine be every name beside,
But 'mother' ours alone."

THE FIRST OFFENSE.

In the cheerful dining-room of my bachelor friend Stevenson a select party was assembled to celebrate his birthday. A very animated discussion had been carried on for some time as to whether the first deviation from integrity should be treated with severity or leniency. Various were the opinions and numerous the arguments brought forth to support them. The majority appeared to lean to the side of "crush all offenses in the bud," when a warm-hearted gentleman exclaimed:

"Depend upon it, more young people are lost to society from a first offense being treated with injudicious severity than from the contrary extreme. Not that I would pass over even the slightest deviation from integrity either in word or deed—that would certainly be mistaken kindness. But, on the other hand, neither would I punish with severity an offense committed, perhaps, under the influence of temptation, too, that we ourselves may have thoughtlessly placed in the way, in such a manner as to render it irresistible. For instance, a lady requires a servant; the girl has hitherto borne a good character, but it is her first place; her honesty has never yet been put to the test. Her mistress, without thinking of the temptations to which she is exposing a fellow-creature, is in the habit of leaving small sums of money, generally in coppers, lying about in her sitting-room. After a while she begins to think that these sums are not always found exactly as she left them. Suspicion falls on the girl, whose duty it is to clean the room every morning. Her mistress, however, thinks she will be quite convinced before she brings forward her accusation. She counts the money carefully at night, and the next morning some is missing. No one has been in the room but the girl; her guilt is evident. Well, what does her mistress do? Why, she turns the girl out of the house at an hour's notice; cannot, in conscience, give her a character; tells all her friends how dreadfully distressed she is; declares there is nothing but ingratitude to meet with among servants; laments over the depravity of human nature, and never dreams of blaming herself for her wicked—yes, it is wicked—thoughtlessness in thus constantly exposing to temptation a young, ignorant girl; one, most likely, whose mind, if not enveloped in total darkness, has only an imperfect twilight knowledge, whereby to distinguish right from wrong. At whose door, I ask," continued he, growing warmer, "will the sin lie if that girl sink into the lowest depths of sin and misery? Why, at the door of her who, after placing temptation in her very path, turned her into the pitiless world, deprived of that which constituted her only means of obtaining her honest livelihood—her character; and that without one effort to reclaim her; without affording a single opportunity of retrieving the past, and regaining, by future good conduct, the confidence of her employer."

"There is, I fear, too much truth in what you say," remarked our benevolent host, who had hitherto taken no part in the conversation; "and it reminds me of a circumstance that occurred in the earlier part of my life, which, as it may serve to illustrate the subject you have been discussing, I will relate."

There was a general movement of attention, for it was a well-known fact that no manufacturer in the town was surrounded with so many old and faithful servants as our friend Stevenson.

"In the outset of my business career," said he, "I took into my employment a young man to fill the situation of under clerk; and, according to a rule which I had laid down, whenever a stranger entered my service his duties were of a nature to involve as little responsibility as possible, until a sufficient time had elapsed to form a correct estimate of his character. This young man, whom I shall call Smith, was of a respectable family. He had lost his father, and had a mother and sisters in some way dependent upon him. After he had been a short time in my employment it happened that my confidential clerk, whose duty it was to receive the money from the bank for the payment of wages, being prevented by an unforeseen circumstance from attending at the proper time, sent the sum required by Smith. My confidence was so great in my head clerk, who had been long known to me, that I was not in the habit of regularly counting the money when brought to me; but, as on this occasion it had passed through other hands, I thought it right to do so. Therefore, calling Smith back as he was leaving my counting-house, I desired him to wait a few minutes, and proceeded to ascertain whether it was quite correct. Great was my surprise and concern on finding that there was a considerable deficiency.

"'From whom,' said I, 'did you receive this money?'

"He replied, 'From Mr. ——,' naming my confidential clerk.

"'It is strange,' said I, looking steadily at him. 'But this money is incorrect, and it is the first time I have found it so.' He changed countenance, and his eye fell before mine; but he answered with tolerable composure, 'that it was as he had received it.'

"'It is vain,' I replied, 'to attempt to impose upon me, or to endeavor to cast suspicion upon one whose character for the strictest honesty and undeviating integrity is so well established. Now, I am perfectly convinced that you have taken this money and at this moment it is in your possession; and I think the evidence against you would be thought sufficient to justify me in dismissing you immediately from my service. But you are a very young man; your conduct has, I believe, been hitherto perfectly correct, and I am willing to afford you an opportunity of redeeming the past. All knowledge of this matter rests between ourselves. Candidly confess, therefore, the error of which you have been guilty; restore what you have so dishonestly taken; endeavor by your future good conduct to deserve my confidence and respect, and this circumstance shall never transpire to injure you.'

"The poor fellow was deeply affected. In a voice almost inarticulate with emotion he acknowledged his guilt, and said that, having frequently seen seen me receive the money without counting it, on being trusted with it himself the idea had flashed across his mind that he might easily abstract some without incurring suspicion, or, at all events, without there being sufficient evidence to justify it; that, being in distress, the temptation had proved stronger than the power of resistance, and he had yielded.

"'I cannot now,' he continued, 'prove how deeply your forbearance has touched me; time alone can show that it has not been misplaced.' He left me to resume his duties.

"Days, weeks and months passed away, during which I scrutinized his conduct with the greatest anxiety, while at the same time I carefully guarded against any appearance of suspicious watchfulness, and with delight I observed that so far my experiment had succeeded. The greatest regularity and attention, the utmost devotion to my interests, marked his business habits, and this without display, for his quiet and humble deportment was from that time remarkable.

"At length, finding his conduct invariably marked by the utmost openness and plain dealing, my confidence in him was so far restored that, on a vacancy occurring in a situation of greater trust and emolument than the one he had hitherto filled, I placed him in it, and never had I the slightest reason to repent of the part I had acted toward him. Not only had I the pleasure of reflecting that I had, in all probability, saved a fellow-creature from a continued course of vice, and consequent misery, and afforded him the opportunity of becoming a respectable man and a useful member of society, but I had gained for myself an indefatigable servant—a faithful and constant friend. For years he served me with the greatest fidelity and devotion. His character for rigid, nay, even scrupulous honesty, was so well known that 'as honest as Smith' became a proverb among his acquaintances. One morning I missed him from his accustomed place, and, upon inquiry, learned that he was detained at home by indisposition. Several days elapsed, and still he was absent; and, upon calling at his house to inquire after him, I found the family in great distress on his account. His complaint had proved typhus fever of a malignant kind. From almost the commencement of his attack he had, as his wife (for he had been some time married) informed me, lain in a state of total unconsciousness, from which he had roused only to the ravings of delirium, and that the physician gave little hope of his recovery. For some days he continued in the same state; at length a message was brought me, saying that Mr. Smith wished to see me, the messenger adding that Mrs. Smith hoped I would come as soon as possible, for she feared her husband was dying. I immediately obeyed the summons.

"On entering his chamber I found the whole of his family assembled to take farewell of him they so tenderly loved. As soon as he perceived me he motioned for me to approach near to him, and, taking my hand in both of his, he turned toward me his dying countenance, full of gratitude and affection, and said, 'My dear master, my best earthly friend, I have sent for you that I may give you the thanks and blessing of a dying man for all your goodness to me. To your generosity and mercy I owe it that I have lived useful and respected, that I die lamented and happy. To you I owe it that I leave my children a name unsullied by crime, that in after years the blush of shame shall never tinge their cheeks at the memory of their father. Oh, God!' he continued, 'Thou who hast meted to others, do Thou mete unto him.' Then, turning to his family, he said:

"'My beloved wife and children, I intrust you to the care of that Heavenly Parent who has said, "Leave the fatherless children unto Me, and I will preserve them alive, and let thy widows trust in me," and you, my dear master, will, I know, be to them as you have been to me—a guide, protector and friend.'

"That," continued the kind old man, looking on us with glistening eyes, "though mixed with sorrow, was one of the happiest moments of my life. As I stood by the bedside of the dying man and looked around upon his children growing up virtuous, intelligent and upright, respecting and honoring, as much as they loved, their father: when I saw his wife, though overcome with grief for the loss of a tender and beloved husband, yet sorrowing not as one without hope, but, even in the moment of agony, deriving comfort in the belief that she should meet him again in that world where "adieus and farewells are sounds unknown;" when I listened to his fervent expressions of gratitude and saw him calmly awaiting the inevitable stroke, trusting in the mercy of God and at peace with his fellow-men; and when I thought what the reverse of all this might have been—crime, misery, a disgraceful and dishonored life, and, perhaps, a shameful and violent death, had I yielded to the first impulse of indignation, I felt a happiness which no words can express. We are told that there is more joy among the angels of God over one sinner that repenteth than over ninety and nine just persons that need no repentance. With such a joy as we may imagine theirs did I rejoice over poor Smith, as I closed his eyes, and heard the attendant minister in fervent tones exclaim: 'Blessed are the dead that die in the Lord; yea, saith the spirit, for they rest from their labors and their works do follow them.'

"My friends, I am an old man. During a long and eventful career in business, I have had intercourse with almost every variety of temper and disposition, and with many degrees of talent, but have never found reason to swerve from the principle with which I set out in life, to temper 'justice with mercy.'"

Such was the story of our friend. And I believe there was not one in that company but returned home more disposed to judge leniently of the failings of his fellow-creatures, and, as far as lay in his power, to extend to all who might fall into temptation that mercy which, under similar circumstances, he would wish shown to himself, feeling "that it is more blessed to save than to destroy."

HE OWNED UP.

Even the poor inebriate has a logic of his own. When he returned to his domicile in the early hours of the morning the words which greeted him were not those of tender solicitude, hoping that he had enjoyed himself with his friends, but rather words of somewhat severe personal criticism. She looked at him for a moment, as he attempted to explain that the minister's meeting did not adjourn as early as he had hoped, and then said, with withering scorn, "John, you are intoxicated." Seeing that he was discovered, he threw off all disguise and replied, "Well, Maria, I did the best I could; and, if you had taken as much wine as I did, you would be a good deal more intoxicated than I am."

THEY had just been married. He seized her hand, and said, in a low, tremulous voice: "It was your innate modesty and apparent indifference, dearest Sallie, that made me register a vow to marry you at all hazards." "Yes," she sighed, "but I slipped up on three or four of the most eligible young men in town before I found that out."

A new invention for stopping trains: Train robbers.

THE "BOSS" SYSTEM AMONG ESQUIMAUX DOGS.

There is always one bully in every team, who gets all the choice bits that are stolen by the others, and generally manages to keep fat, no matter how short they are of provisions. He waits for the others to make the raid, and then stands on the outside to take it away from them. These bullies are in several grades. There is the chief, of whom all are afraid, and then there is the next in rank, of whom all are afraid but the chief; a third, of whom all are afraid but two, and so on down. Sometimes the food is cut into small pieces and thrown out upon the ice for all to help themselves, and then there is a rough-and-tumble fight, and snarling and growling, as if a whole cage of hyenas had broken loose. But here the bullies have no advantage; indeed, the advantage is with the small, lively fellows that slip in and get the meat while the big ones are fighting. When a dog manages to steal a piece of meat he has a lively time of it, for soon every other dog in camp is after him, and he has to eat it on the run, if at all, headed off at every turn by one of the bullies, and whining and choking at the same time. It certainly is one of the most comical exhibitions ever witnessed.—"Among the Esquimaux."

SINGULAR COINCIDENCE.

Quite a sensation was created in the Galveston Recorder's Court by a notorious colored chicken-thief accusing his Honor, by implication at least, of being in with him in stealing chickens. The charge is not regarded as reliable by the friends of the official.

On Jim Webster being brought up, the Recorder asked him:

"If you did not intend to steal those chickens, what was your motive in taking them?"

"Jedge, I has been up here befo'e you so often that I has come to lub and respec' you, and foah God, Jedge, I intended to make you a present of dat pa'r ob pullets."

"I don't believe anything of the kind. Policeman, what did this man say when he was arrested?"

Policeman—"Your Honor, when I caught him he told me that he had a partner, but I did not know who it was at the time."

His Honor fined the policeman for contempt, and had Jim Webster locked up for ninety days.—Galveston News.

TOO FAT FOR THE CHARACTER.

Sir Julius Benedict, writing in Scribner of Jenny Lind, says of the production of an operatic adaptation of Schiller's "Robbers" in which she took part:

"A whimsical circumstance quite marred what was to be one of the most striking scenes of the drama. Old Moor, who, like King Lear, has disinherited his younger and devoted son for the elder, Franz, a deman in human form, is punished for his credulity by being thrust into a dungeon by this villain, there to starve. Carl, the rejected son, who has become the chief of a band of outcasts, discovers the whereabouts of his unhappy father, whose prison-doors he forces open. The old man, on appearing on the stage, half crazy by his suffering and famine, exclaims, 'I am starving!' Now pere Lablache, having the circumference of two Falstaffs rolled into one, looked anything but a picture of starvation, and, when he made the piteous appeal, naturally set the whole house roaring."

THE YOUNG.

To accustom the young to do and to do is more important than to induce them to learn and to know. What they think out with their own thoughts and work out with their own hands is worth far more to them than any amount of passive reception of other men's thoughts or doings, even through the very best books or the best teachers. Let the child feel, not merely that he is preparing for something in the future, but that he is also living a true and real life in the present, taking his own share of work and responsibility, strengthening his powers by continual action, and building up his character by continual well-doing.

WHEN Beaconsfield was young, the Duke of Rutland sneered at him. Disraeli had a long memory. Returning from Berlin in triumph, after years, somebody said he would be made a Duke. "I, a Duke!" he exclaimed, with feigned resentment, "make me a Duke! Why, Rutland's a Duke!"

IT is a time-honored custom in Quincy, Fla., to salute a newly-married couple by firing a cannon. This is to remind those present that the battle of life has fairly begun.

FUST appearances are said to be everything. I don't put all my faith into this sayin'; I think oysters and clams, for instance, will bear looking into.—Josh Billings.

SAN FRANCISCO AGENCY.—L. P. Fisher, 21 Merchants' Exchange, is our Agent, and is authorized to contract for advertising, receive subscriptions and make collections on our account.

CHAS. W. CRANE, 318 Pine street, Room 39, San Francisco, is our Agent, and is authorized to contract for advertising, receive subscriptions and make collections on our account.

WAS IT NOT A CONSPIRACY?

During a recent trip to Antelope Valley, in this county, we had the pleasure of meeting a prominent citizen of Stanislaus county who related a singular incident that occurred in our mountains about the middle of June—some eighteen days before President Garfield was shot by that damnable wretch. Our informant had been in the mountains several days, looking after a flock of sheep which he owned, and had heard no news for a week, or more, when he met a sheep-herder, who had just returned from civilization. After passing the time of day our friend asked him the news, "Garfield has been shot by a Frenchman!" was the quick reply. "Oh, pshaw! That is one of your canards! Tell me some news." Other matters were then talked of and they separated. A few days after they again met, when the sheep-herder was asked if the Garfield story he had told was not a canard, and he acknowledged that "there was nothing in it!" It was but a few days after this singular remark was made that our noble Garfield was shot—shot by an Americanized Frenchman! When the vile assassin was arrested he confessed that he intended to have shot President Garfield several days before he finally accomplished his villainous purpose! Had he accomplished his purpose according to his programme would not the fatal shot have been fired about the time the sheep-herder told that Garfield had been shot? The question natural to arise is, Is there not an organization of Nihilists in this country, in every State, of which Guiteau was the chosen one to remove Garfield from the head of the Government? And perhaps this sheep-herder is a member, and knowing of what was in contemplation, unwittingly made the remark, believing that the horrible act had been committed. If such is not the case, and the sheepherder is innocent and free of all such connections, it is a remarkable instance of forethought, if such it can be called; but we cannot but believe that the taking off of the great Garfield was a well concocted conspiracy, and that Guiteau was the accredited agent to do the foul deed, for the Nihilists in New York and elsewhere were prepared to have a formal celebration of the event, but which was abandoned when they saw such a feeling of indignation and horror swelling the American breast. It is true that the authorities have failed to discover that the wretch Guiteau had any backing, but time may show that he had.

A CHURCH BUILDING.—A lot on Main street has been purchased for the erection of a Methodist church, and our people are expected to assist in its erection by contributions of money, material and labor, and it is but right that we as a moral, God-loving community should do all these things; the church and school house are the monuments of a grand civilization, and they are the first that should be erected in every community, and we doubt not our people will subscribe to the extent of their means toward the erection of a church edifice, but the projectors of this enterprise must be liberal in their management of it. We are a small community of Methodists, Baptists, Catholics, Episcopalians, Presbyterians, Congregationalists, Quakers, and a host of others—but no one sect can build a church single-handed—all must contribute to a common fund to build but one church—a community edifice, to be used by any denomination that may desire to use it for the time being. It should be always open for lectures, musical entertainments, or for any literary, educational, moral purpose that interests the people. As the Methodists have a full organization and have services at stated times, there should be no objection to their taking care of it, with a full understanding that when not in use by that denomination it shall be free to all other denominations. With an understanding of this kind we believe there will be no difficulty in collecting sufficient to carry through such an enterprise. Under a "free church" arrangement we hear that N. B. Hunewill of the Eagle Sawmills, will make a very liberal donation of lumber.

THE CALIFORNIAN.—The readers of the Californian have a store of entertaining and instructive reading in the October number of this popular monthly. Joaquin Miller commences his new serial, "One of the World-Builders. Chas. H. Phelps contributes a poem, "At the Summit. James O'Meara furnishes an interesting account of the expedition of Henry A. Crabb into Sonora. Then we have a poem, "Motherhood," by Mary H. Field; Don Carlos, the second paper, by Edward Kirkpatrick; a "Lapp Song," by Margaret Rhett. W. C. Bartlett contributes an interesting paper on Samuel Williams, the recently deceased journalist. Prof. Davidson tells much of what he knows about "Comets." The Cheney "'49 and '50" papers are concluded. Julia M. Goodlett contributes a story of the "Sunny South," "Ole Emeraine," and Warren Cheney treats of "The Plains of Butte," which with the "Outeroppings," etc., make up a fine number. Published by The California Publishing Co., 408 California street, San Francisco.

SLICKENS.—The Supreme Court has decided that the Drainage Act is unconstitutional. How about the $500,000 drained from the peoples' pockets?

"The Last of Earth."

The mortal remains of the beloved Garfield were reverently deposited in their final home at Cleveland, Ohio, on Monday last in the presence of the largest concourse of people ever assembled in the United States for so solemn a purpose. The city was crowded with the best citizens of the Republic, come to pay the last tribute of respect to the illustrious dead. The funeral procession was very long and imposing. The floral and other decorations were elaborate and appropriate to the occasion.—While the final interment was taking place at Cleveland the American heart in every city, town and hamlet in our country, and in every portion of the civilized world, beat responsive to the hearts of those who were performing the last sad duty at Cleveland, and funeral ceremonies were held everywhere in token of the general grief. Let the great rest! May Americans and all civilized peoples teach their children, for generations to come, to revere the memory of JAMES A. GARFIELD as we were taught to revere that of the Immortal WASHINGTON!

HARPER'S MAGAZINE.—Harper's Magazine for October is an exceedingly interesting number. Its illustrations are very fine, and numerous. Its frontispiece is a full page illustration by Abbey, entitled "With Grandpa." The leading illustrated article is entitled "A Berkshire Road." "Journalistic London" is an exceedingly interesting paper, giving much information regarding London journals and journalists, with numerous engravings. "Adirondack Days," is an entertaining sketch of vacation life and sport, beautifully illustrated. Then we have an article on Frederick A. Bridgman, the prominent American painter, with a portrait and eight engravings from Mr. Bridgman's paintings. Charles Barnard contributes an entertaining article on "The Telegraph of To-Day," a subject of great interest to the people of this country. Henry W. Grady furnishes an illustrated article on the cotton culture of the South, Judge Goodwin, of the Salt Lake Tribune, treats on the "Mormon Situation," and gives expression to the genuine alarm felt by the Gentile population of Utah on account of the growth and aggressiveness of the Mormon system. "Anne" and "A Laodicean," are continued, and there are several short stories, besides the usual Editorial Departments, which are well worthy a careful perusal. As a whole, this number is a very excellent one. Harper & Bros., publishers, New York.

The U. S. Revenue cutter Corwin has been heard from. A landing was effected on Herald Island and explored. Landing was made on Wrangel Land, and formal possession taken in the name of the United States of America, the flag being hoisted and a salute fired. There were no signs of human habitation, and the country is desolate and sterile beyond description. No traces were discovered of the Jeannette.

ANOTHER COMET.—Intelligence from the Warner Observatory, Rochester, N. Y., announces the discovery of a new comet located in the constellation of Virgo. It is a striking coincidence that this new bright comet appeared at the hour that President Garfield was breathing his last. It was first seen by E. E. Barnard in Nashville, who has made claim through Prof. Swift for the Warner prize of $200 in gold. This makes the fifth comet seen since May 1st, and of this number four have appeared from almost the some spot.

Maggie, daughter of Charles Young, of Alviso, aged 14 years, was instantly killed while returning from funeral ceremonies at San Jose, on Monday. The team running away she jumped from the carriage.

The State Board of Equalization has rescinded the tax of 5 cents, levied for drainage purposes. Small favors thankfully received!

Gen. Hancock has suspended for the present the order for a Court-martial to try Mason, who shot at Guiteau.

A portion of the Oneida Community from New York, have purchased land near Santa Ana for a colony.

LOCAL INTELLIGENCE.

SOCIAL DANCE.—A social dance was given at Wedertz Hall on Thursday evening.—The hall was crowded, our best citizens turning out en masse. Good music was in attendance, and during the evening some fine singing was indulged in, much to the gratification of the many present who were unable to take part in that branch of the entertainment. It was one of the largest and most enjoyable parties ever given in Bridgeport.

MINING SUIT.—The Superior Court, Department No. 2, Judge Wiggin, presiding, is engaged in the trial of the case of Taylor vs. Middleton—to quiet title to a mine in Indian District. Judging from the array of legal talent engaged in it the property ought to be a valuable one, as General Kittrell, of Reno, General R. M. Clark, of Carson, and Frank Owen, appear for the plaintiff, and Mess. Bennett & Reddy for the defendant.

SCHOOL MONEYS.—Mrs. C. W. Sullivan, Superintendent of Schools, has apportioned school moneys as follows:

THEIR NUMBER.—The Assessment Roll for this year shows that there are 792 real estate taxpayers in Mono county. Quite a little army to help grease the wheels of government.

ITS FOOTING.—The Assessment Roll of Mono county for this year foots up $3,135,622, an increase over that of last year of $891,516—not so poor a showing in view of the collapse in Bodie values.

PERSONAL.—This week we had the pleasure of calls from Gen. Kittrell, of Reno, and Frank Owen, of Bodie.

Judge R. M. Briggs returned from Jackson yesterday.

DEEDS.—During the month of September there were recorded in the County Recorder's office 56 deeds—31 real estate and 25 mining.

MORTAGES—During the month of September 10 mortgages were recorded and 3 released.

NOTARY.—Governor Perkins has appointed O. F. Hakes, of Bodie, a Notary Public, to reside at Bodie. A good appointment.

THE GARFIELD OBSEQUIES.

On Monday last the citizens of Bodie appropriately observed the day set for the interment of the remains of President Garfield, business being entirely suspended, and societies and citizens participating in a procession and other funeral ceremonies. Buildings were draped in mourning, flags half-mast, minute guns fired and bells tolled. The ceremonies commenced at the Miners' Union Hall, where the casket was placed upon a bier, covered with a black velvet pall, with heavy silver fringe. On the casket was a silver plate upon which were engraved: "James A. Garfield, died September 19, 1881, aged 50 years." At the head and foot were monuments of flowers and in the center a large white wreath. The choir handsomely rendered "Rock of Ages." George H. Winterburn, Master, read the Masonic service. The procession, comprising the Knights Templar, Odd Fellows, Knights of Pythias, Miners' Union, Fire Department, Veterens of the Late War, Free and Accepted Masons, United Workmen, Citizens, and the Hearse, drawn by six black horses, marched through the principal streets, and to the cemetery. At the grave the opening hymn was, "Come ye Disconsolate;" prayer by Rev. F. M. Warrington, hymn, the following oration by Dr. J. W. Van Zandt:

SOLDIERS AND FELLOW CITIZENS: To-day, as with one great throbbing heart, our Republic mourns the death of its Chief Magistrate. A noble, brave, gifted, eloquent spirit has taken its leave of earth, and winged its flight to join the congress of patriots, soldiers and statesmen, who have gone to receive the welcome of "Well done, good and faithful servant." A great life has been stricken from the roll call of nations. No more will the reveille awake him; never again will we listen to his burning words of eloquence, wisdom and love. The mighty intellect, which contended in the forum and upon the field, for the love of man and the fraternization of all races of men, lies dead, and all that remains of the mortality of James A. Garfield, late President of these United States, will today be consigned to the tomb. In deep grief our people bow to the mandate of an inscrutable Providence. Everywhere on earth where liberty has a votary; wherever wrong exists, or a burden marks its furrow upon the brow of labor; wherever oppression sears its weight of woe upon the galled heart of man—there will beat responsive to our sorrow the lamentations of a woe unutterable.

The history of the world never before gave an example of as great and causeless a wickedness as in the taking off of so great and good a man as our beloved President. Its horror palls the mind, and startles the with the question, If indeed, there could live so vile a wretch who could imbue his assassin hand with innocent blood to make a nation mourn?

In a government most benign and liberal; with a freedom unexampled in the republics of old; a prosperity and advancement in all the elements and forces of a grand civilization; with millions of homes freighted with peace and happiness; with chorus of song and thanksgiving for all good gifts; with a landscape of life so beautiful and fragrant that, in our confidence and trust we fain would think no blight could mar our land—when suddenly in the flash of a weapon, deadly in its aim, a shadow overwhelms us and plunges a bright and happy land in gloom and mourning for a martyr, an apostle of faith, a conservator of law, a just and Christian patriot—dead, beneath the starry banner whose folds embrace all creeds of love and benedictions of grace to man.

O, land most stricken! Oh, people most bowed down! Where will you go for succor? Where will you find consolation?—Who will restore the broken column, and set the Arch, upon which rests the temple of our fame? I need not tell you of the birth, life and deeds of our dead President. Every child in our land is familiar with his history. Admired by all political parties, above the strife of factions; acknowledged by all governments abroad as a gifted, pure, and able statesman; known to his countrymen as a gallant soldier—history will write his name high upon the roll of fame in undying letters upon the Capitol, above which presides the Goddess of our power.

James A. Garfield, a descendant of a sire who in lineage was Knight Crusader to Jerusalem; a mother in whose veins runs the blood of the puritan, he was in the strictest sense a representative American. He achieved the highest station; every step was a merited progress; a march of honor; a typical life. He became the first citizen of the Republic; the Chief Magistrate of the first power among the civilized nations of the globe. His head crowned with laurels, and haloed with love of country.—From the crest of our Sierra Mountains we send the echo of our grief back to the sea, whose eternal requiem sounds the loving memory of the illustrious dead.

No spectacle is so sad as that of a whole nation when it is bowed down by a great sorrow, mourning like Rachel for her loved ones and will not be comforted. For the second time in our history we clothe ourselves in sack cloth and drape our homes with symbols of despair.

We cannot know why this affliction should come upon us, or why this Nemesis of a merciless judgment could not have been stayed. Is it for any national sin, or pride of power, by which the Angels fell? or have we been ungrateful or committed some grievous wrong that so dire a calamity should visit our happy land? Has the sword of an avenging Michael, and the spear of an Ithurial pierced the armor of our vain glorying, that we to-day lament the death of one, chiefest among us all? God forbid that such should be our life; but rather that errant, wandering, lost intellect, groping in the darkness and in the chaos of a lost mentality has severed the golden chord, and broken the pitcher at the fountain, and stopped the loom whereon was woven the golden threads of beautiful thought and power that no physician could heal, no balm bring deliverance.

In a strong and glorious faith we bow our heads, for the mighty fiat has gone forth, and we humbly say, "Thy will be done, O Lord." Our sacred dead, he of the compass and the square, has found the lost word, where mortality rested upon divinity; has drank the libation of wisdom and honor; been anointed by the chrism of love, and now joys in the celestial lodge and temple of his faith.

With our hearts full of condolence to his aged and stricken mother, the crushed and bruised wife, the orphaned children, we commend them to the God of Nations. We pray that he upon whom falls the mantle of our dead chieftian may be so gifted with wisdom, so directed in the administration of the laws, so supported and upheld by the people and his Cabinet that he may guide the ship of State safely through the tempestuous seas of civil strife, and securely anchor in the port and haven of constitutional law, liberty and justice to man.

A hymn, Masonic service, benediction, and three volleys over the grave, by the Veterans, and the return march closed the mournful event. The procession was imposing in all its appointments, and reflected great credit upon the patriotism of the people of Bodie. It was twenty-one minutes passing a given point.

THE READING HABIT.

Charles Dudley Warner says, in the Christian Union, that the extent of the reading habit is overestimated. Even in the United States, where the habit of reading is most prevalent, few of the population read a book. In support of his opinion, Mr. Warner brings out the following:

Nearly everybody takes a daily snatch at the newspapers, at the summary of news or at the telegraph columns, and the base-ball record, and occasionally persons follow for days the columns devoted to some singular accident or curious murder—even women have acquired the art of deftly skimming the cream off the morning journal; comparatively few of the entire population, even the educated, read books.

Unless a book by some good luck becomes a fashion, and is recommended in conversation, few see it; the number of people who originally seek out the real able book from their habit of craving is very small.

When a story becomes the fashion everybody reads it; but who is everybody? Why, a novel is said to have a "run" if 10,000 copies of it are published for 40,000,000 people.

And there are books that "everybody has read, and all the newspapers talk of," which have not got beyond the third or fourth thousand.

The late Samuel Bowles once told me of his experience. He had written his capital book on the far West at the time of the Pacific-railway excitement, when millions of people were eager for the information his book contained.

Never did a book seem to be in greater demand; it was sold in England as well as in America, and all the newspapers of both countries quoted from it and commented on it.

Mr. Bowles said that he never met a person who had not read it—or who did not say he read it, I forget which. And yet, he asked, how many copies do you suppose satisfied this enormous demand of everybody? Fifteen thousand filled the market.

I believe that the majority of business men read a book very rarely; the majority of young men in business and in society, I fancy, read little—they do not give their evenings to reading, and are not apt to take up a book unless it becomes the talk of society.

People who spend a great deal of money on dress, on dinners, on amusements, would think it extravagant to buy a book, and, if one is commended to them, they will wait till they can borrow it or get it from the library.

They do not hesitate two minutes about an ordinary $2 dinner, but they will wait months to borrow a 50-cent book.

ADVERTISE

BRIDGEPORT CHRONICLE-UNION

THE UNION.

BRIDGEPORT, OCTOBER 1, 1881.

WHAT AIR SHALL WE BREATHE AT NIGHT?

Many years ago Florence Nightingale assailed the popular superstition against breathing night air with the unanswerable question, What other air can you breathe at night? Dr. Oswald enters upon the assault against this superstition, which survives every attack, upon no other ascertainable ground than that the less reason there is for a superstition the harder it is to kill it.

"Before we can hope," he says, "to get rid of the consumption with any chance of success, we have to get rid of the night-air superstition. It is probably the most prolific single cause of impaired health, even among the civilized nations of our enlightened age, though its absurdity rivals the grossest delusions of the witchcraft era. The subjection of holy reason to hearsays could hardly go further.

"'Beware of the night-wind; be sure and close your windows after dark!' In other words, beware of God's free air; be sure and infect your lungs with the stagnant, azotized and offensive atmosphere of your bedroom. In other words, beware of the rock spring; stick to sewerage. Is night-air injurious? Is there a single tenable pretext for such an idea? Since the day of creation that air has been breathed with impunity by millions of different animals—tender, delicate creatures, some of them—fawns, lambs, and young birds. The moist night-air of the tropical forest is breathed with impunity by our next relatives, the anthropoid apes—the same that soon perish with consumption in the close though generally well-warmed atmosphere of our Northern menageries. Thousands of soldiers, hunters and lumbermen sleep every night in tents and open sheds without the least injurious consequences; men in the last stages of consumption have recovered by adopting a semi-savage mode of life, and camping out doors in all but the stormiest nights. Is it the draught you fear or the contrast of temperature? Blacksmiths and railroad contractors seem to thrive under such influences. Draught? Have you never seen boys skating in the teeth of a snow-storm at the rate of fifteen miles an hour? 'They counteract the effect of the cold air by vigorous exercise.' Is there no other way of keeping warm? Does the north wind damage the fine lady sitting motionless in her sleigh, or the pilot and helmsman of a storm-tossed vessel? It cannot be the inclemency of the open air, for even the sweltering summer nights, the sweet south wind, blessed by all creatures that draw the breath of life, brings no relief to the victim of aerophobia. There is no doubt that families who have freed themselves from the curse of that superstition can live out and out healthier in the heart of a great city than its slaves on the airiest highland of the Southern Apennines."

AIRING THE BEDS.

It must be a false idea of neatness which demands that beds should be made soon after being vacated. Let it be remembered that more than three-fifths of the solids and liquids taken into the stomach should pass off through the pores of the skin—7,000,000 in number—and that this escape is most rapid during the night, while warm in bed. At least one-half of the waste and putrid matter (from twenty to thirty ounces in the night) must become more or less tangled in the bedding—of course soiling it—and a part of this may become reabsorbed by the skin if it is allowed to come in contact with it on the next night, as it must if the bedding is not exposed for a few hours in the light. We may well imitate the Dutch example of placing such bedding on two chairs near the window in the sunlight, or in the window, that the best purifier known, the light of the sun, may dissipate their impurities or neutralize them. At least three hours, on the average, is as short exposure as is compatible with neatness. —Congregationalist.

There are three evils under the sun that make for man's unhappiness: They are dyspepsia, rheumatism and neuralgia. It was Sydney Smith, we believe, who said: "Put your finger in a vise and screw it up as tight as it is possible to bear the pain and that is rheumatism, give it another turn and that is gout." What is true of the gout is equally true of neuralgia, but blessed is the being who knows neither.—Chicago Alliance.

APPLE-CORN PONE.—One quart of finely-chopped apples; one quart of Indian meal; scald with a pint of boiling water, add sweet milk to make a stiff batter, then stir in the apples; add a little salt. Bake in a close vessel three hours or pour into a tin pail, cover tightly and boil in a kettle of water for the same time. Eaten with sweetened milk or cream.

A NICE PLAIN PUDDING.—One quart of flour; butter the size of an egg; a pint of milk; two table-spoonfuls of baking powder; one cup of cut raisins. Steam one hour in a two-quart dish. Boil a pint of milk, add sugar, two table-spoonfuls of flour and flavoring for the sauce.
